RESEARCH AT UNIVERSITY OF NEVADA LAS VEGAS

Sport Psychology

Dissertation – Inner Experience & Golf Performance

2004 - 2007

This qualitative study explored inner experience during sport performance by obtaining contemporaneous non-retrospective reports of inner experience using Descriptive Experience Sampling (DES). Examined inner experience during competition with highly-skilled and moderately-skilled golfers. Results suggested inner experience during golf performance consists of several types of inner experience including golf-related content, mental preparation strategies, perceptual awareness, and inner speech, to name a few.

Dissertation chair: Russell T. Hurlburt, Ph.D.

Thesis – Intervention Evaluation of Mental Preparation Strategies for the 200 meter run: a Controlled Outcome Study

2000 - 2004

This quantitative study evaluated the influence of several mental preparation strategies on 200 meter run performance. Participants were randomly assigned to one of 3 conditions: 1) technical skills and motivational statements, 2) negative statements, and 3) a control group. Results revealed no significant differences among these conditions.

Thesis chair: Bradley Donohue, Ph.D.
