What if every child fulfilled their potential?

Joey is 10. He has a roof over his head and food to eat. But because his parents aren’t able to care for him, he lives with his aunt in a small, very crowded apartment.

He is hopeful for a Big Brother he can just have fun with, without worrying about anything. He wants to play soccer with his Big Brother, or learn a new sport, like rock climbing.

At-risk kids like Joey need an extra positive influence that a Big Brother or Big Sister can provide to help them reach their potential.

Children facing adversity who are paired with caring, adult mentors for one year or more improve in all areas:
- confidence
- school attendance and grades
- relationships with family and friends
- ability to avoid risky behaviors

What could you start? Find out at bbbsnn.org.